the Macivor

The Clan Macivor — Son of Ivaar — claim that they fought in the army of Alexander II when, in 1221, he drove the Norsemen out of Argyll. They settled on lands in Lergochonzie & Ashnish. Ivor Macivor of Lergochonzie was Chief in 1361 and the chiefship continued until 1564.

Parts of the clan broke away and settled in Lochaber and in Wester Ross. A considerable colony in time established itself in the Island of Lewis.

Ivor, Chief of Asknish, was forfeited in 1685 but, after the Revolution of 1688, the 10th Earl of Argyll restored the lands to the Chief's son on condition that he took the name of Campbell.

A band of Macivors fought for Prince Charles under MacDonell of Keppoch.

the Lamont

The Clan Lamont, or Lamond, is one of the oldest. The first chief of the Clan Lamont of whom there is definite historical evidence is Ferchar, who flourished about 1200.

From the 15th to the 17th century, the chiefs used the [illegible] side of "Inveryne", with Toward Castle for part of [illegible] principal residence. Toward Auchamore [illegible] the seat of the chief, and [illegible] sold in the 19th century.

In the 18th century, the chiefship passed through Margaret, daughter and heiress of Dugald Lamont of Lamont, to the heir of line, her son Archibald Lamont, from whom descended John Henry Lamont, who was awarded the chief arms as heir of line and was also awarded supporters by the Lord Lyon in 1909.

the Stewart

The Royal House of Stewart sprang from a Breton noble, Alan, who became Sheriff of Shropshire. His son, Walter Fitz-Alan, went north to settle in Scotland. There he became Great Steward to David I, an office subsequently made hereditary in his house. Walter, the 3rd, adopted as his surname his title of Stewart. Walter, 6th, High Stewart, who commanded part of the Scottish army at Bannockburn, married Lady Marjory Bruce and their son ascended the Throne as Robert II: eventually King of Scots; so began the Royal House of Stewart. Its descendants were Kings and Queens of Scotland until 1707. On the death of Prince Charles, Edward and his brother, the male line of the Royal Stuarts ended.

According to the principal of tanistry, the chiefship of the Royal House has accordingly passed through George III and Queen Victoria to the present Royal House of Windsor. King George VI was thus Scotland's "Chief of Chiefs". Head of the Celto-Scottish Royal House. The Chiefship of the Stewart Clan devolved upon the Earl of Galloway as nearest in blood bearing the names and arms of the House of Stewart.

the Fergusson

Atholl was the early home of this Clan, where it was established before the reign of Bruce, having come there from its original lands of Strachur in Argyll. The Fergussons of Atholl descend from Adam, son of Fergus — styled Adam na canabaig, "Adam of the Pavillion" — who had charters of lands in Perthshire from Baliol and Bruce, and also claim descent from the Princes of Galloway.

They were among the gallant Atholl men who followed the banner of Montrose in the Civil War, and in 1745 were "out" with Prince Charles.

In Aberdeenshire, where the Fergussons have been landowners since the 14th century, many family members have distinguished themselves on the Bench, at the Bar, and in Parliament.

the Cameron

The Camerons were staunch supporters of the Stuart kings. Sir Ewen fought at Killiecrankie and was knighted in 1680. His grandson was "The Gentle Lochiel", who led the Clan out in support of Prince Charles in 1745.

The estates were forfeited, but restored in 1784. Achnacarry Castle, on an island, in Loch Eil, has long been the home of the Chief.

The Clan consisted originally of the MacMartins of Lettertinlay, the MacGillonies of Strone and the MacSorleys of Glen Nevis. Eventually the chiefship passed to the Strone branch in the person of Cameron of Lochiel, who obtained royal recognition and jurisdiction with the erection of the Barony of Lochiel in 1528.

the Morrison

The Clan Morrison hails from the Island [illegible] and from parts of the adjoining mainland of North West Scotland.

The Morrisons — Sons of the Servant of the Blessed Virgin — are believed to derive from the same stock as the MacLeods of Lewis.

The first recorded Morrison is Hugh, the Reeve, contemporary of practically the last MacLeod of Lewis, Roderick MacLeod, chief from about 1535-1595. The Reeve held the hereditary office [illegible] gaige or "lawman". The Morrisons are an important clan in the Hebrides and in the north west mainland of Scotland.

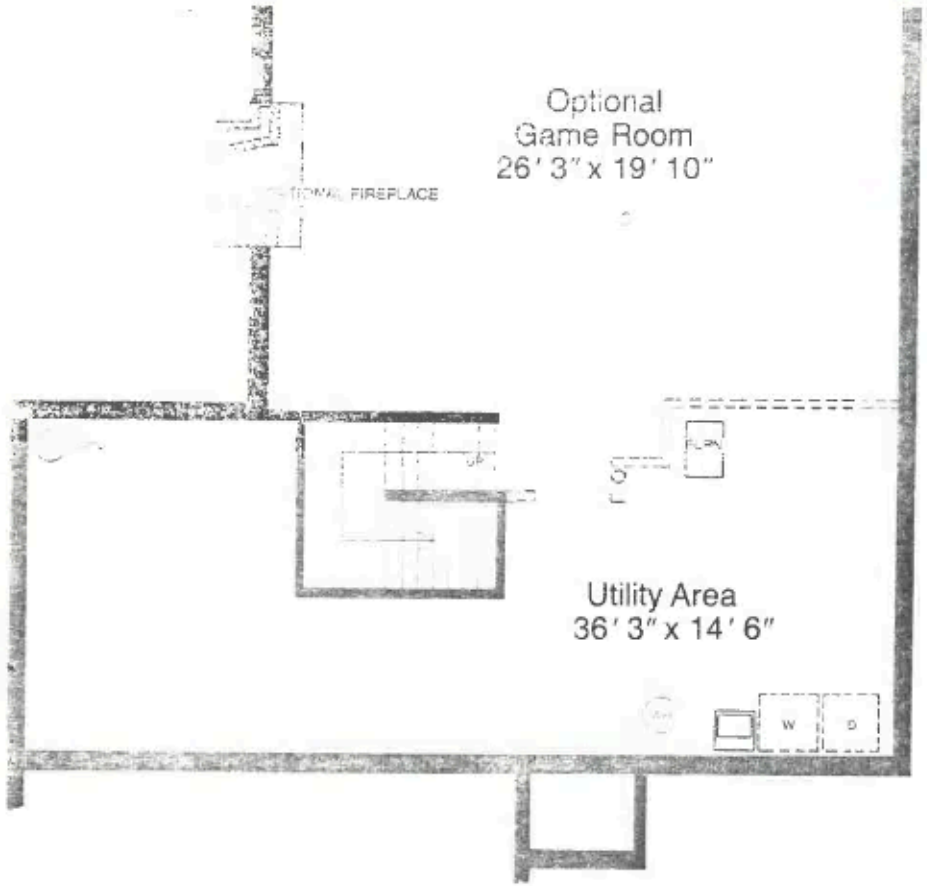

Captain Alex Morrison of Skinidin, in Skye, was closely associated with James Macpherson in his Ossianic researches.
